Zog I was probably the strangest monarch of the 20th century. The Times called him 'the bizarre King Zog' and his biographer, Jason Tomes, quotes descriptions of him ranging from 'a despotic brigand' to 'the last ruler of romance'. He created his throne for himself and as Europe's only Muslim king ruled Europe's most obscure country.

Albania's ruler during the 1920s and '30s, Ahmet Zogolli, the self-appointed King Zog, is one of modern European history's most fascinating characters. Educated in Istanbul, Zogolli was the privileged son of an Ottoman bey, or chieftain. After youthful sojourns in Constantinople and Vienna, where he acquired a taste for café society and bespoke attire, he returned home and entered Albanian politics, being a signer of the Albanian declaration of independence in 1912.
