'You Too Can Have a Body Like Mine,' by Alexandra Kleeman 'You Too Can Have a Body Like Mine,' by Alexandra Kleeman. Any two people stuck to each other in the present made for a wasteland." The only antidote for that wasteland is television — the constant, reliable company of that "device casting light and movement," that box filled with strangers whose lives A, B and C pursue every day from the sofa.

The processing in You Too Can Have a Body Like Mine resembles the kind you experience in a dream; a working out of puzzles at a level just below that of awareness. This is a book of ideas, some of them stand out like the sinister Kandy Kakes, sold through adverts in which a starving Kandy Kat repeatedly tries and fails to eat them, or the ...
